Description

The Department of Humanities at Ca' Foscari University of Venice (Dipartimento di Studi Umanistici dell'Università Ca' Foscari Venezia) invites applications for a fellowship in: “#EtiamEgo. Violence against women in ancient Rome (Archaic and Late-Republican Age): comprehensive analysis of the case studies; data processing into the digital platform.”, Academic discipline: L-ANT/03 Roman history, duration 12 months, tutor Prof. Francesca ROHR, financed by the PRIN 2022 project “#EtiamEgo. Violence against women in ancient Rome: historical perspectives and symbolic constructions.”(codice progetto 2022PC8Y93), CUP: H53D23000290006 Head of Unit, Prof. Francesca ROHR.

Abstract: This research aims to investigate models, behaviors and features of violence against women (women coming from élite families - senatorial and Equestrian - and those belonging to the lower classes) in Ancient Rome (Late-Republican Period and Archaic Age) through an analysis of the ancient sources. The research assistants will be expected to conduct a census and systematic examination of literary, historiographic, epigraphic, legal and numismatic through paper and digital archives, using keywords, to identify case studies and classify them, by an open access digital platform, based on indicators related to the historical reconstruction - protagonists, different forms of violence, motivations behind the violent action - and to the historiographical representation of the phenomenon - narrative format, lexicon/vocabulary.

The research may be carried out in English.
