Description

of Linguistic and Comparative Cultural studies at Università Ca' Foscari Venezia invites applications for a fellowship in:

-Title: Narration and Medicine in Latin American Cultures Between Acquisition and Problematization: Application Perspectives and Therapeutic Approaches (20th and 21st centuries)

-Scientific area: L-LIN/06

Abstract:

The present research project is part of the PRIN project Narration and medicine in Latin American culture: application perspectives, from Latin America to Europe, towards an inclusive and flexible society, and focuses on the transdisciplinary relationship between medicine and literary discourse in the Hispanic-American context. The investigation will focus on the inclusion and adaptation between medical languages, considered both from a thematic and formal point of view, and literary ones within contemporary and ultra-contemporary Spanish-American literary productions. Among the objectives of the project the following emerge

1. how the experience of illness, the relationship between patient and therapist and healing practices are described in Hispanic-American literatures;
2. which discourse and/or narratological analysis techniques can be applied both to literary works and oral narratives, and to generic anthropological narratives that refer to the process of healing and possible recovery. Narration can therefore be considered as a type of general organization of discourse.

Priority will be given to the use of an interdisciplinary methodology that involves the use of concepts deduced from fields such as, for example, forensic medicine, forensic anthropology and indigenous medical practices.

The research may be carried out in Italian and Spanish.

The fellowship is intended to provide the successful candidate with the opportunity to pursue his/her own research while benefiting from the range of expertise at Università Ca' Foscari Venezia.
