The Demobilisation of Italian Transnational War Volunteers, 1860s-1970s", CUP: H53D23010170001, Head of Unit Prof. Elena BACCHIN.

Abstract

The project “Returning Foreign Fighters. The Demobilisation of Italian Transnational War Volunteers, 1860s-1970s”, discusses the trajectories, fates, and legacies of Italian foreign fighters who had moved to a state other than their own with the intent to perpetrate, plan and participate in, or support acts of war, or to give or receive military training. The research will focus on Liberal Italy and specifically, it might focus on the 1863-4 Polish Uprising, the 1866-69 Cretan Revolt, the international defense of the Paris Commune, the Greco-Turkish War of 1897, the “Splendid Little War” in Cuba, the Balkan wars, and Italian volunteers in the Argonne in 1914 (before Italy entered the First World War). In particular, it investigates the actions of Italian foreign fighters who returned to their home country to understand whether they demobilized or chose new forms of political mobilisation and to analyse what Italian and international authorities did to monitor and, possibly, contain and repress their actions. The postdoc fellow will carry out research in Italian and foreign archives and libraries with the aim of collecting documentary and printed material relating to the research.

The research may be carried out in English.
