Abstract: Alongside their effects on economic performance, DDIs offer data-centered solutions to unsolved social and environmental problems. They stimulate business model innovation (Baden-Fuller and Haefliger, 2013) and new ways of combining profit-seeking with answers to socio-environmental challenges. The aim of the project is to understand how Data-Driven Innovations (DDIs) allow organizational innovation to generate new hybrid business models (Battilana and Lee, 2014) that, together with profits, also achieves social and environmental positive impact.

The candidate will explore the within-firm knowledge base changes required to carry out DDIs in new ventures and their effect on firms' stakeholders and ability to use data for social good (Tomasev et al., 2020).

The research is part of the larger project PRIN 2022 “Data Driven Innovation. Measuring its Effects on Industries, Firms, and Business Models” in collaboration with Università di Pavia, Università Bicocca Milano, Scuola Superiore Santanna Pisa.
