Abstract: The research is part of the Prin 2022 programme 'Near Eastern empires at work', and it constitutes an integral part of the research programme of the Ca' Foscari Unit in Venice, which focuses on the study of the Transtigrian region north of Mosul in the long Islamic period. This region took on a specific strategic role in agricultural production, of cereals in particular, with the rise of the Abbasid caliphate (9th century) and again in some phases of the long Islamic period, when it was a province of the Ottoman Empire (16th-19th centuries). More specifically, the research 'The pottery of the ruralscape in the Early Islamic period (7th-10th c.)' will explore, on the basis of the ceramic data, the impact that the establishment of the Caliphate produced on territory and society. The research aims to construct pottery chrono-types of reference on a regional scale based on the unpublished documentation emerging from the site-observatory of Tell Zeyd (Dohuk province).
