The research fellowship is awarded for the purpose of collaboration with the following research programme of the Department of Economics:

Abstract:

The research project examines the possible role of European ports as key actors in engaging the new geopolitical and geoeconomic challenges currently facing the EU.

Focusing on the port-spaces of the Adriatic, with Venice at their center, the research project interrogates these dynamics at three interconnected scales: the regional one, that of the Mediterranean and the 'wider Mediterranean', and that of the nascent EU 'Maritime Space'. In particular, the project aims to: 1) trace the evolution of new roles and functions for ports not only as trade and logistics nodes but also as energy hubs and key sites for the EU's security strategies; 2) furnish an understanding of some of the ways in which ports can become not only national and European strategic assets, but also active players in pursuing the EU's key objectives (including those outlined in the Competitiveness Compass and the European Defense Industrial Strategy). Following from the above, 3) propose a) concrete EU investment strategies for ports and port-systems, in particular in the realms of new technologies, AI and digitalization and b) imagine new European governance and regulatory frameworks for ports as critical infrastructures in affirming EU strategic interests and strategic autonomy, not only national concerns.

The research fellowship amounts to Euro 20.000,00, gross to the recipient.
